HANGAR CLUB
34-36 E. 63rd St.
New York City

Tom Miller's "daytoninmanhattan.blogspot.com" for Wednesday November 20, 2019 contains a detailed history of the Hangar Club. He includes information about its opening in 1930, and its closing and auction of furnishings in 1941.

His detailed article quotes from two New York Times articles, as follows:

On August 16, 1929 The New York Times reported on the "development of a new club for men interested in aviation. Indeed, the Hangar Club would be initially composed of "aviation executives, bankers and others interested in the financing and development of aviation."

Scammell produced the china service for the Hangar Club's 72-seat dining room on the third floor. This crested china is on 'Ivory' body, and features a circular logo with the head of a man wearing a winged helmet. There is a blue rim band with platinum rim line. The china was supplied by Myers, Minott & Co, Inc.

The surviving examples of this Scammell china are artifacts from a short-lived club. As is often the case, restaurant china is one of the few bits of history that survives.
